Scott Mason's Condition Still 'Guarded'

Scott Mason, nine-year-old hiker injured in an accident on Mount Olomana last week, has shown slight improve-ment at St. Francis Hospital although he is still in "guard-ed" condition.

He has been in a daze since he tumbled some 400 feet down a steep slope of the mountain last Monday afternoon.

Yesterday he spoke isolated words for the first time

The hospital says he is doing relatively well, but the seriousness of his head injury and the possibility of internal injuries keep him on the "guarded" list.

The boy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Mason of 1604 Ulualana Place Olomana Subdivision, Kailua Mason is State Director of Economic Development.

Offer Bootleggers Chance to Get Rich

By CHARLES URLE.

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 12 (AP)—An executive left the office of a small oil company in Houston, his briefcase lighter and his billfold heavier than when he entered.

The executive had just made a deal that could involve millions of dellars. But they would be blackmarket dollars

He arranged to soil oil maps—pieces of paper showing possible oil deposits—to the small business.

Another compans, much larger, had spent several hundred thousand dollars just to have the maps made.

But somehow the maps got into the wrong hands

Copies were made and the maps returned to a guard ed vault before the large company knew they were miss-

The man who bought the hooting maps thought they might be stolen, or copies of maps made at the expense of others, but he closed his eyes to this.

Anything to cut down the chance of failure in the risky business of searching for oil.

The problem occurs in almost every state where oil it found.

Most bootleg operations are concentrated in Texas, however, because many of the large companies have main offices in the state.

main offices in the state.

Three men were arrested in Dallas and Houston in April in the most recent publicized case. Police estimated the men had as many as 5.000 maps—worth an estimated $15 million—in their possession.

That touched off an investigation by the Harris Countries of the state of the sta

That touched off an investigation by the Harris County Grand Jury in Houston that still continues. It also convinced the large companies something more should be done to thwart dealers in blackmarket maps. The Texas Legislature, at the close of its regular session in May, passed a law making it a felony to steal oil maps or copy them without the permission of the owners. Some of the oil companies became so worried they hired a former assistant U.S. attorney to co-ordinate the hired a former assistant U.S. attorney to co-ordinate tne investigation between police and company investigators. C. Anthony Friloux, the investigator, worked about two months helping police sort the confiscated copies and determine which companies owned the originals. Friloux, following the lead of the companies, would not say publicly how many maps were involved nor what they might be worth.

PRETTY WIDESPRAD

"It's been pretty widespread," Friloux said. "This has gone on for a long time. People in the industry have kind of winked at it until they got hur."

"But I think the new law, and this investigation, will stop it."

The maps, made by seismographic explosions under-ground, show subsurface formations that could contain oil deposits.

oil deposits.

The maps are used to help make decisions about buying leases, negotiating drill-lease deals with landowners, and to complete surveys of previousy unmapped areas. Most of the larger companies now guard their maps with great caution. Seisshograph crews are highy paid, the equipment is expensive and competition is tough. All this makes the maps costly.

Sometimes the maps are valuable only to the company that made them.

LEGAL TENDER

Other times they are almost legal tender in oil circles. So, many companies take no chances and keep the maps in vaults that can be entered only by trusted employees.

Sometimes romance is involved, as in the case of some bootleg maps several years ago.

The bootlegger found out which executive of the big company had most access to the maps. He knew the man was honest and would make no deals.

But the executive had a pretty secretary. The bootlegger exhe her the rush.

Soon he convinced her they would make a good partners both in romance and business. They would set up their own oil company, he proposed; and make a success of it because of her brains.

But first he had a problem, he told her. He wan't quite stre what format to use for the oil maps they would needs.

quite sure what format to use for the oil maps they would need.

He suggested she smuggle out a few maps from her boas so he ould see how the big company did it. She took some from the executive's deak. The maps were back before anyong missed them. But the bootley from the copies.

The maps appeared on the under the counter market. The parinership never came about.

The culprit was never convicted because under the old law it was up to the state to prove the maps were worth anything. And he wasn't dealing in stoken property, only
